How do you organize a locker?

Use bins, small containers, or locker organisers to sort items by type--hygiene, snacks, emergency gear, etc. Make sure frequently used items are easily accessible, and consider magnetic hooks or shelves for added organization. With the right setup, your locker becomes more than a box--it becomes your daily support system.

How do you store small items in a locker?

Use magnetic spice jars to store little items in your locker by repurposing them as storage. The sides of your shelves or the inside of your locker door are good places to attach them. Paper clips, rubber bands, and other little materials that are prone to be misplaced are ideal for keeping in them.

How do I choose a work locker?

You only need to ensure that your work locker can accommodate the type of locker you choose. Reduce the number of items you need to carry on your commute to and from the office, and keep a dedicated pair of work headphones in your office locker.

What should you put in a work locker?

A water bottle can be a great addition to your work locker. Buy a water bottle with a handle lid so you can hang it on a rail hook and optimise the space. A vacuum-insulated water bottle will keep your cold beverages fresh and you will have access to your favourite drink to re-energise whenever you need it.

Put in a coin purse, pencil box, or other small container at the back of your locker. Stock this with items you don't use often, but could really regret not having access to.
